VOLUNTARY DIVERSION OF WHEAT ACREAGE IS ENCOURAGED

A total of 51 wheat producers in Appomattox County have signed up so far to participate in the 1962 wheat stabilization program, according to W. D. Hix, III, chairman, County Agriculture Stabilization and Conservation Committee, The highest number of producers to sign up in one day was 20 on September 28.

The sign-up period for wheat producers opened September 28. It will continue in all winter - wheat commercial wheat counties until December 1. There will be another sign-up early in 1962 for producers of spring wheat, the chairman said.

The 1962 wheat stabilization program provides for a 10-per cent reduction in wheat acreage, calculated from the national allotment of 55 million acres. This reduction is already made in the farm allotments established before the recent marketing quota referendum. Each farmer in the county who has a 1962 wheat allotment and those producers who have not planted more han 15 acres in one of the past 3 years have received information showing rates of payments they may earn by diverting wheat acreage to conservation uses. One rate is for the required, or minimum, diversion. A second, higher rate will apply to additional acres which they divert to conservation uses.

The ASC Committee is encouraging farmers to divert additional wheat acres under the program, above the minimum 10-percent reduction reflected in their 1962 allotments. They list six reasons why such additional diversion is attractive to producers.

It is financially attractive. Producers will get higher rates of payment for diverting more than the minimum acreage under the 1962 wheat stabilization program.

It can be considered a form of income insurance. Maximum diversion payments offer protection against loss of crop due to drought, insects, hail, flood or other natural disaster.

Advance payments are available. Growers who divert acreage from production of wheat under the 1962 program may receive advance payment.

Diversion saves money. If a farmer uses borrowed money for crop operations, he will save both principal and interest by borrowing less than would have been required if he had also planted and harvested wheat on his entire allotment.

Diverion improves the land. Approved conservation practices on diverted acres improve the farm's productive capacity for the future when it may be needed. Land value is safeguarded for the individual farmer and his family, and also for the consumers of the future.

Diversion is good citizenship. Voluntary retirement of wheat acres is one way that farmers can help reduce the cost of government. It makes it possible to reduce the cost of agricultural programs by bringing national wheat production more nearly in line with consumer demands.
